Theme of the Year: Making Space!

Make Space for the High Holidays

This Rosh Hashanah begins the Jewish year 5787. It is a rare year that is bookended by Shabbat: Rosh Hashanah opens on Shabbat, and the following Rosh Hashanah will also open on Shabbat.

This calendar setup happens about once in a generation.

Shabbat is the day when G-d invites us to step away from weekday demands and make space for family, G-d, rest from the mundane, and be present for each other.

A year that is surrounded by Shabbat is a year that is filled with the lesson of Shabbat - making space for the important things in life.

Fun Fact: Most Jewish years have twelve lunar months and approximately 354 days. This coming year has 385 days, making it the longest Jewish year possible. Meaning this is the one year that has the most opportunities for making space.

We invite you to begin making space by RSVPing for the High Holidays at Chabad.

Rosh Hashanah begins Friday evening, September 11, and continues through Sunday, September 13. Because the first day is Shabbat, we will sound the shofar on Sunday.
Yom Kippur begins Sunday evening, September 20, and continues through Monday evening, September 21.

Please RSVP today. Your response helps us prepare the seats, food, and rooms so there is space for everyone.

If someone comes to mind who may appreciate a personal invitation, please send them the RSVP link too.

With best wishes for a Shanah Tovah!
